

1. A stomach cell line growing in nutrient broth has a mutation in the gene encoding a particular type of tRNA. Assuming the mutation is not lethal to the cells, explain why the amount of SIRT3 mRNA in this cell line is identical to the amount produced by a normal stomach (NSNS) cell line but the amount of SIRT3 protein is less than in the NS cells.

(a) answer